KITCHEN SCIENCE: Your kitchen is a great place to study science! What does baking soda do? Why does bread have to be kneaded? Why does turkey breast always seem dry? Most of us have no idea, nor have we ever really thought about it. Cooking involves chemical reactions that combines molecules in a mixture, or changes them through chemical reactions. When you eat the tasty food you’ve cooked, your body performs another series of chemical reactions allowing the nutrients in the food to nourish you. It is an amazing process: come to this class to find out more. Then try out some kitchen science experiments! Lunch provided.
